

October is here, and the mornings and evenings have grown chilly. The cats who remained hidden during the summer have started to get active. In my neighborhood, they still lounge under the trees while the sun is out, but in the evening they gather together for a chorus! Maybe the humans should join them. (Ronni)

Part 3 Peace Map Making in Nada 2010.1.9 (Sat.) (See below for details)

Profile: Takashi MORIZUMI. Born in Kanagawa Prefecture in 1951. Photo journalist. Morizumi continues to work to expose such topics as children of the Iraq War, people contaminated by radiation from the nuclear tests in Semipalatinsk, Okinawan civilians who experienced the war, and the effects of the depleted uranium used by the US in the Gulf War. He has many publications. <http://www.morizumi-pj.com/index.html>

Life... Life comes in many different forms. Think of your own life, or the lives of those close to you. Your pet has life, as do people around you and all the plants and creatures on the earth. The earth itself has life, too. Every life is very important, but everywhere lives are being threatened. Where? How? These photos depict children in war-torn areas such as Afghanistan and Iraq, people who are living with radiation poisoning, or people who survived the war in the former Yugoslavia.... They are all alive.

We are hoping that this three-part event will provide a space for thinking together about 'life' and 'peace.'

Part 1: The Takashi MORIZUMI Photo Exhibit for Peace will help us think about 'life' and 'peace' in other parts of the world.

Part 2: Morizumi works in war-torn and other devastated areas. Through his lecture, we will learn about 'life' and 'peace.'

Part 3: Through peace map making, we can find our own 'life' and 'peace.'

Our lives, other's lives, the earth's life.... What is the color of life?

Transcultural Popoki!

Popoki at the 24th 'Transcultural Salon'!

On 26 September, Popoki, Ronni and Satoko attended a session of the 'Transcultural Salon' held at the Umeda Satellite Campus of Osaka Sangyo University. Ronni's talk entitled "Popoki, What Color is Peace? Understanding Other Cultures with our Bodies and Senses," gave participants opportunities for not only discussion, but also drawing and Poga. We all had a good time. In addressing the topic of 'intercultural Popoki,' Ronni spoke of her experiences in using Popoki in a variety of countries and locations with a wide range of audiences, and what she has learned with Popoki's new friends. This type of participatory presentation was an unusual approach for the members of the Transcultural Salon, but everyone participated with enthusiasm. Thank you! (Ronni)

Popoki in Okinawa

We went to Okinawa from 22 – 25 September to learn about peace, military bases and war experiences. The first thing we discovered was Popoki at the International Street Junku-do Bookstore!

Yoneko Arashiro, a lecturer at Okinawa International University, took us to see the huge US Futenma and Kadena, Bases. At the site on the university campus where a US military helicopter crashed, she told us of her experiences. It really made us understand the 'terror' involved in living in the midst of military bases. Prof. Arashiro has cats, and immediately became Popoki's friend.

Prof. Arashiro introduced us to Yoshiharu Miyazato (left) who is gathering testimonies about the deaths of groups of local residents at the end of WWII on Zamami Island. Miyazato-san took us around the island, showing us various locations where local people killed themselves under orders from the military.

Zamami is a really beautiful island! Yoshiharu-san also took us to the best spot on the island see the sunset and in the evening we shared a delicious meal and sake!

Popoki's Friends at Hyogo International High School

On 16 October, Ronni taught a session of the international subject "International Relations" at the Hyogo Prefectural International High School. The students were active and interested and Ronni was very impressed with them. Everyone had a good time. Thank you all. We are looking forward to seeing you again.

(Ronni, Sofia and Popoki).

What Color is 'Sensei'?

Ronni Alexander

On clear nights, if you look closely, you can see Popoki dancing among the glittering stars. Today, he has a new partner, Professor Michio ROYAMA. Will the professor scold the dancing Popoki and make him sit down and study, or will he smile and begin dancing with him? Royama-sensei is serious and loves to study, but actually he loves to play, too.

How long has it been since the two have been together? More than twenty years ago, when Popoki was still a kitten, I put him in a basket and took him on the Bullet Train to visit Professor Royama in Tokyo. At first, Popoki was scared but as he became accustomed to his new surroundings and began to play. Watching the naughty Popoki, Professor Royama's gaze was gentle but his attitude, as always, was strict. After all, he is a 'sensei.'

Many years ago, when I was just setting out on my journey down the long road of peace research, Professor Royama threw me a question that would last a lifetime. "Is there anything more important than peace? Maybe justice and/or freedom tomorrow are more important than peace today." Professor Royama always greeted my pursuit of peace with an incisive comment, counter-argument or sometimes even a harsh word, but he always listened and gave straight and honest answers. "You don't have to agree with me, you just have to convince me." Sometimes I found him frustrating, but Professor Royama was also inspiring. He was not only a real sensei, but a real person.

Today, as I said my last farewell, I imagined Professor Royama playing in the sky with Popoki. Suddenly, I had a thought. Maybe life, and perhaps love, or hope, or continuing to be curious are more important than peace. Or perhaps it is the other way around; maybe having life, love, hope and a never-ending string of questions are the meaning of peace.

All living things must eventually die. If peace is being able to celebrate life, it is also being able to grieve at the passing of those you love and respect. Today, I thanked Professor Royama for helping me to become who I am and swore that I would continue to seek the answers to his questions with life, love, hope and curiosity....and of course, Popoki.

What Popoki Means to Me

Shinji MASADA

Chibichiri-Cave is the place that taught me most intelligibly about the meaning of the tragedy of war.

Since I stood there for the first time, I have visited there many times with young people, in order to try to convey the “heart” of Okinawa and “hope” for peace.

There is a very important reason why Shouichi Chibana burned the Hi-no-maru, (the national flag of Japan) at a softball game during the Okinawa National Athletic Meet in 1987. Tetsuro Shimojima, a writer of juvenile literature, invited Chibana to join in an inquiry about the mass suicide at Chibichiri-Cave. Chibana found human ashes and fragments of utensils in the cave. Chibichiri Cave is located near a field where Chibana played as a boy. The older women living nearby who survived the tragedy never said a word to him about what had happened there.

On April 3, 1945, 85 civilian residents of Yomitan village were forced to commit mass suicide. They lit fires in the cave, took poison and used sharp razors and other tools. Among those present were children, including infants of only one or two years of age. The mothers killed their young children and daughters. The daughters in law killed parents in law. After that they killed themselves.

They were taught in school that “Death is preferable to the insult of becoming prisoners of the U.S. army”. This is the misery caused by the education by the Imperial government demanding loyalty to the Emperor.

The people who experienced the war tend not to talk about the cruelty they saw, but it is very important to hand down their stories from generation to generation. Chibichiri-Cave is surely one of my Popokis.
